more at war. This renewed conflict has been generally labelled the "Second Scottish War of Independence"™. While there is no doubt that the second war began in 1332 there is more uncertainty as to when it ended. Unlike the first war, there was no peace treaty between Scotland and England bringing the armed conflict to an end.

The purpose of the thesis is to examine whether the second war of independence from 1332-41 was a "national" war or simply a series of regional conflicts. Three separate but overlapping influences are examined: national identity, the extent to which the different regions of Scotland were drawn in, and the landed interests involved in each region.
