Knife can change the mindset of an attacker completely if seen with enough time to allow backpedaling. If there is time, show it, and if attacker decides to go against it, use it only for short and quick slashes at close range.

Which is better when defending oneself with a knife: slash

With your arm and elbow in a comfortable position, place the face of the knife on the stone and note the angle of knife to stone for sharpening. A 60-70° angle of knife to stone is common. A wider or narrower angle is acceptable, but keeping this angle of knife to stone consistent every time you sharpen is critical to sharpening success.
