(AIA; Lemen et al. 2012) onboard the Solar Dynamics Observatory (SDO) have been used for helioseismic studies Howe et al. (2011a, 2011b). SDO was only launched in 2010 and so these instruments cannot be used to study previous solar cycles. They are, however, likely to play an important role in helioseismic studies of cycle 24, and possibly beyond.

weaker than the main 22 yr cycle, and its intensity varies with time. The 2 yr component appeared more clearly in the northern hemisphere in cycle 20 and in the southern hemisphere in cycle 21; its value was smaller in cycle 22 [4]. The biennial cycle represents a challenge to the solar dynamo theories that usually explain only the main cycle.

We also address how solar UV flux variability over a solar cycle influences the plasma and neutral tori in the inner magnetospheres of Jupiter and Saturn, and estimate the solar cycle effects on internally driven magnetospheric dynamics.
